This book examines the relation between morality and the emotions in current philosophical debates, focusing on three clusters of issues: (i) Emotions and their relation to morality is, however, problematic. Since ancient times, philosophers have disagreed about the place of emotions in morality. Emotions such as blame, guilt, and shame are the voice of moral conscience, and are central to the functioning of our social lives and normative practices. Moral Emotions. Emotions – that is to say feelings and intuitions – play a major role in most of the ethical decisions people make. Most people do not realize how. Emotions such as anger, fear, grief, envy, compassion, love and jealousy have a close connection to morality. Philosophers have generally agreed that they can. The role of emotions in morality is disputable. There is a long intellectual tradition suggesting that emotions are morally disruptive and hence must be eliminated. In this second report, I consider the relationship between emotion and morality from a geographical perspective. Though traditional and contemporary.
